BODIES RECOVERED FROM NAOMI MINE.

Up to 11 O'clock This Morning
30 Corpses Had Been Found.

OFFICIALS SAY 31 PERISHED.

Preparations Are Being Made to Bring the Remains to the Surface from Air Shaft of the Ill-Fated Mine
This Afternoon.

Special to The Courier.
JAYETTE CITY, Dec. 3.—At 11 o'clock this morning 30 bodies had been brought to the bottom of the Naomi mine air shaft. Officials of the company and the State Mine Inspectors are of the belief that not more than 31 miners lost their lives in the explosion. Not a single man escaped alive from the mine. While the canvass of the foreigners in the mining town has been made, some of the opinion that a number of men accompanied the night shift men into the mine for a brief visit, it being Sunday evening.

J. D. O'Neil, Vice President and Manager of the company, said at noon: "I do not think the death list will exceed 31. We have figured it out and can not see how it can go beyond that number."

Preparations are being made to bring the bodies of the dead miners to the surface this afternoon and lay them out in the air shaft and hold out in the temporary morgue situated in the power house of the mine. The dead, or those who recovered, are very little disfigured, which is a comfort to the families of the deceased. Of the bodies recovered but one of them is unrecognizable. The others apparently died of asphyxiation, being suffocated before they could make their way out of the mine. Only six English speaking men are known to have lost their lives in the explosion. They are:

DYNAMITE EXPLODED.

Steve Zato at the Cottage Hospital With Serious Burns.
Steve Zato, aged 18 years, an employee of the Washington Coal & Coke Company at Star Junction, is at the Cottage State Hospital suffering from burns as the result of an explosion of dynamite into yesterday afternoon. He is badly burned about his face and his condition is serious. Zato is a Hungarian.

WAS SPECTATOR.

Burgess A. D. Soloson Watches George Porter Dispose of Prisoners This Morning.

Burgess Soloson returned from Baltimore this morning on the Duquesne Limited and appeared in police court just as Acting Burgess George Porter was disposing of prisoners. For the first time since his term as Burgess began Mr. Soloson was a spectator in his own court and appeared to enjoy the proceedings to a great extent. Bill Bell, a Uniontown Italian, was the star prisoner. Bill was pinched for following two girls around town last evening. Officers McDonald and Mitty placed him within the confines of the jailhouse. Bill, in spite of his protestations of having a wife and children at home, was fined $5. He paid.

Patrick Tynan, who occasionally pays a social call to the boys within the jailhouse, was given 48 hours for being drunk. Tynan is working at Tower Hill.

Edward Clark got 48 hours for drunkenness, while Joe Kesho, arrested as a suspicious character, drew his discharge.

RAZOR WAS FATAL.

Mrs. Rose Kenney Dies From Blood Poisoning After Cutting Throat With Instrument.

Special to The Courier.
DUNBAR, Dec. 3.—The razor as a corn cutter proved fatal to a death dealing instrument in the case of Mrs. Rose Kenney, an aged resident of this place, who died yesterday from blood poisoning. About a week ago Mrs. Kenney was cutting one of her toes with a razor when the instrument slipped, inflicting a gash in her toe. Although the became sore, Mrs. Kenney did not consult a physician until blood poisoning had thoroughly set in. It was then too late to save her life.

Mrs. Kenney was 59 years old, a member of St. Aloysius church. Her funeral will be held from the church tomorrow morning at nine o'clock. Rev. E. D. Murphy, conducting regular high mass.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

Interesting Sessions Are Being Held in Somerset County.
SOMERSET, Dec. 3.—(Special.)—The regular annual session of the Farmers' Institute in Somerset county was held at Sellersburg Friday and Saturday of last week. Jacob S. Miller, of Fredonia, Somerset township, is Chairman of the Institute in Somerset county. Chairman Miller has obtained a very efficient corps of instructors for this session.

The Institute will be held at Sellersburg and Sellersburg this week. The basement auditorium at the court house is the place selected for the sessions at Somerset.

No Jury Trials This Week.
There will be no more jury trials in the civil cases during the present term of court at Uniontown until January, because so many cases have been settled or continued and the jurors summoned for the first week have been discharged until January 13.

Bradley Verdict
ONE OF ACQUITTAL.

Jury Took Two Ballots, One Man Holding Out on First.

OUTCOME OF TRIAL IS POPULAR

When Jury Came in This Morning Suppressed Cheer Greeted Their Verdict and Defendant Was Given an Ovation Leaving Court.

United Press Telegram.
WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—After being out for 415 years to 1007 this morning, the jury in the trial of Anna M. Bradley for the murder of Edward Bradley, known as the "Lumber Company" case, returned a verdict of not guilty. Two ballots only were taken. The first vote was 11 to one for acquittal. The second vote at midnight was unanimous for acquittal. The juryman voting against acquittal on the first ballot was Julius A. Price, a bookkeeper, the oldest member.

When the verdict was announced there was a moment of silence; then a great cheer was subdued with difficulty. Mrs. Bradley hurried from the Court House in an automobile and was taken to the home of a friend. She was given an ovation as she drove away.

Mrs. Bradley was calm and collected as she entered court but showed pallor of sleepless nights. The women spectators greeted the verdict with tremendous applause, shrieks of joy and waving of handkerchiefs.

Several bills narrowly escaped being held out because they were not accompanied by the regulating slips. The purchase of material. Directors Harrison and Shupe were strenuous in urging that this rule be obeyed to the letter.

Retrenchment may be the order of the day in the School Board. Last night Directors Shupe and Harrison made a kick on the telephone and located in the various buildings, and for a while it looked as though these modern appliances were doomed to go. The phones cost the Board $45 a year for the four. For the present they will remain.

The Finance Committee had no report to make, but Chairman Thomas told of the Supply Committee announced that he had let the contract to Hay and Baltimore. There is a kick on this coal, he said, and it may be necessary to try some one else.

The Christmas holiday days were decided upon. They will extend from December 16 to 25 inclusive. There will be school on New Year's Day.

A letter from C. P. Zander, the vice-president, was read, in which he congratulated J. V. Dillman, instructor in penmanship, for the work he is doing in the schools here.

Dr. Shupe inquired if any teachers were calling their children "fools," telling them to "shut up" and addressing them as "kids." He said reports to that effect had reached him. Principal Duffenbaugh said that he had heard nothing of the kind, but if he did, the teacher would be severely reprimanded.

President Schenck announced that he had forgotten about making an investigation into the salary of the School Board janitor, who applied for a raise some weeks ago. He promised to look into the matter.

The gas engine in the South Side building caused no little amusement. It seems to be using too much oil, about a quart a day. According to Janitor Colvin, it leaks at both ends, but swallows the oil in the middle. Director Harrison will look over the engine after paying the following bills the Board adjourned at 10:05.

AN INVESTIGATION BY SCHOOL BOARD.

Members to Probe Matters Pertaining to Addition in Second Ward.

SOME THINGS ARE IRREGULAR

It is Claimed, Board Not Having Been Furnished a Copy of Plans and Specifications, and Knows Nothing
About the Work—Other Matters Up.

The School Board is to investigate itself. A resolution was passed at its regular meeting last night authorizing President W. S. Schenck to investigate all expenses in connection with the addition to the Second Ward school building. This includes an inspection of the minutes of the Board, an examination of all the contracts and an inspection of the work itself.

This action is the result of a dispute that has developed between the Fayette Lumber Company and D. P. Girard over work that is to be done on this building. It appears that Contractor Girard did some work several months ago and submitted a bill for $207 to the School Board. It was never paid. The Fayette Lumber Company says that this work was not in their plans and specifications. Now the foundation for a gas engine is to be built. The Lumber Company and Girard are disputing over whose business it is to build this. The school is poorly heated and the entire apparatus has been neglected.

The School Board, it was stated, at last night's meeting was never furnished with the plans and specifications of the new addition. Now, it is stated, though it was not clear, the Board over but them. The contract between the Board and the Fayette Lumber Company does not say whether the addition to the old building is for one story or whether it takes in a part of the lot or the whole of the Association ground.

Architect J. C. Fulton of Uniontown came in for considerable criticism from the Board. "About the only reference the Board has had to the plan of this building is for one member and Director Frank O'Connor, who last summer and fall passed the new building over, saying, 'neither, noon and night, and he never seen Architect Fulton on the job at all.'"

As a consequence of these developments Mr. Fulton's bill of $255, which is now due, has been very heavy. It consists of a number of items, which consist of a part of the lot or the whole of the Association ground.

Not only will the contract and other documents be subjected to the close scrutiny of the members of the School Board, but the plan of the building will be gone over. The resignation of John L. Gans as a member of the Board has never been received and no action has been taken on the matter. The resignation of John L. GENUINE WINTER IS HERE AT LAST.

Snow Falls on Three Successive Days and Mercury Takes a Drop.

MORE OF IT IS PREDICTED.

According to the Noon Weather Forecast It Will Snow Tonight and Tomorrow—Heavy Fall Reported in the Mountain Districts.

The genuine article of winter, a little late, perhaps, has come at last. Every day since bleak December was ushered in, has been accompanied by snow, and not mere scattering flakes, either. "The noon weather forecast of the Weather Bureau contains prediction of more snow tonight and tomorrow with stationary clouds. As company in the mercury and yesterday morning was one of the coldest of the present winter. It was almost as cold this morning. Overcast and heavy wraps are in demand.

Blacksmiths have been working overtime mending the shoes of horses for the streets are exceedingly slippery, over which heavy loads are hauled, while many of the steepest sidewalks have been turned into skating rinks, much to the dismay and disgust of pedestrians.

In the mountain districts the fall of snow has been very heavy. There has been quite a lot of it in these parts of late and the ground is covered with a blanket of white.

NO CIVIL TRIALS HELD THIS WEEK.

Jurymen Discharged Yesterday and Only One Case So Far Tried.

RETURNS OF THE GRAND JURY.

Big Batch Handed to Court This Morning. Only Two Bills Being Ignored—Important Divorce Decision Handed Down—Other Matrimonial Troubles.

UNIONTOWN, Dec. 3.—After hearing one civil case the jurors for the week were discharged. Practically every case on the calendar has been either settled or continued. There were one or two cases set for the last week of the week ready for trial but the court did not deem it wise to keep the jurors on hand all week just for these.

The one case tried was that of H. A. Crow against Antonio Spillio, an action to recover on a contract alleged to be due for life insurance. The jury returned a verdict for Crow in the full amount, $31.50.

YOU'LL DO BETTER AT Featherman & Sumberg's
Time to Think About Things for Christmas.

We have not the slightest sympathy with that socialistic idea which would try to put lastness, thriftlessness and inefficiency on a par with industry, thrift and efficiency, which would strive to break up the property of the private property holder. The home is far more important than the state, the chief prop upon which our whole civilization stands.

Such a theory if ever adopted would mean the ruin of the entire country but proposals for legislation such as this herein advocated are directly opposed to this class of socialistic theories.

Enforcement of the Law.

A few years ago there was loud complaint that the law could not be invoked against wealthy offenders. There is no such complaint now. The course of the department of justice during the last few years has been such that make it evident that no man is above the law that no corporation is so wealthy that it cannot be held to account. Everything that can be done under the existing law and with the existing state of public opinion, which so profoundly influences both the courts and juries has been done but the law itself needs strengthening. There should be made more definite, so that no honest man can be left unwitting to break them and so that the wrongdoer can be readily punished. Moreover, there must be the public opinion back of the laws or the laws will be of no avail.

themselves will be a failure. Two great evils in the execution of criminal laws today are sentimentalism and technicality. For the latter remedy must come from the hands of the legislatures, the courts and the juries. The other must depend for cure upon the gradual growth of sound public opinion which shall insist that regard for the law and the demands of reason shall control all other influences and emotions in the jury box. Both of these evils must be moved or public discontent with criminal law will continue.

Instances of abuse in the grant of injunctions in labor disputes continue to occur, and the resentment in the minds of those who feel that their rights are being invaded and their freedom of action and of speech unreasonably restrained continues likely to grow. Much of the attack on the use of the process of injunction is wholly without warrant but I am constrained to express the belief that some of it there is warrant. This question is becoming one of prime importance and unless the courts will will act in effective manner. I believe ultimately to demand some form of legislative action. It would be unfortunate for our social welfare if we should permit many honest and abiding citizens to feel that had just cause for regarding our country with hostility. I earnestly come to the attention of the congressmen, so that some way may be found which will limit the abuse of functions and protect those who have been from time to time its unwelcome invaders. Moreover, discontinue often expressed with the use of the process of injunction is not only in labor disputes but in all cases where the public interest is concerned. I recognize the wisdom of this question and am informed that it will soon be the consideration of the supreme court.

The process of injunction is a natural adjunct of the courts doing their work well and as preventive measures are always better than remedial ones. The use of this process is from a standpoint commendable. But it is recklessly or unnecessarily abused and the abuse should be curbed by the very men who are supposed to be the protectors of the public interest.

There should be a relatively even greater increase in the rate of pay of enlisted men if we are to keep the army in shape to be effective in time of need. The president recommends re-examination of officers for promotion up to the rank of major. From that point promotion should be automatic.

It is probable that the army will be our ally in this matter. The army has been disastrously neglected since the war, and it is not surprising that it should be so. The president refers at length to the flagpole peace conference in London.

"Thank you," he murmured, with a most elaborate bow. "I'm much obliged to both of you. Rich people like you don't ever make a little sum like this, and it will make me remember you for many a day, even without the recollection of your pretty faces. You've been square by me, and I'll be square by you. And now one kiss all around, and we'll say good night."

"You scoundrel!" breathed Harriet, furious to her finger tips. "Go instantly or I will call for help."

"Oh, no, you won't, my beauty!" laughed the man. "I'll bet you've kissed uglier men than me before, and I'm going to take you down a peg. You better come and I'll show the man that comes to help you."

Miss Renwick, with the limp and whimpering Imogene clinging to her waist, moved slowly around the billiard table, while the burglar watched her, breathing hard and following with a catlike tread. He had taken perhaps six steps, and his back was now turned toward the door which led into the hall. Suddenly he felt a savage grip about his neck and found himself with outstretched arms, his mouth and nose smashed flat against the table, while a tiny ring of cold steel was pushed behind his ear.

"Stand, you bound, or I'll give you a shot that you never saw in billiards!"

The tone was low, but masterful, and Mr. Jack Bibbs was far too prudent to make no immediate attempt to move.

On Harriet's brain, even in that dreadful instant, flashed a vivid, persistent memory. A gala she had been on the quivering benches of the back, pressed on under a feeling, dizzy pool of death, while in her ears rang words of sweet encouragement. And as then she had exercised her force of will, so now she saved herself once more by clapping her hand over the mouth of this Imogene. This time it was muscle combined with common sense, and a healthy shriek was throttled in its infancy.

Richard released his grip on the nose of his prisoner's head, and the man obeyed. "Hands up! Ah, thank you! Perhaps you also have a gun. Allow me to believe you of its weight." He ran his hand over the person of Mr. Fitzgerald and secured a short, ugly looking pistol and a pair of brass knuckles, both of which he promptly pocketed. "Good!" he chuckled. "Now, Miss Renwick, will you please be good enough to throw some light upon this gentleman?"

"Yes," whispered Harriet; "I think I can explain."

"No, no," the Texan interrupted. "I don't mean words. I refer to the bull-dog lamp. Just turn it on him, please, and we'll look him over."

Miss Harriet complied. The light revealed the countenance of Rodrick Fitzgerald, alias Jack Bibbs, alias twenty other names which have no bearing on this country. His clear cut but dissipated features were distorted and swollen in his rage against the woman who had been thought had laid a trap for him.

"Mr. what a prize package!" observed the Texan softly. "You have a bad eye, my friend; but, after all, I'm rather glad to know you. Miss Renwick, do you think you can find me a rope or a piece of good, strong twine?"

"Oh, what is he going to do?" Miss Imogene began to whimper. "Oh, please, Lord Croftland, won't you let him go? He's my friend. We let him in the library window, and if you let him up everybody will know all about it. Oh, oh, oh!"

Once more sharp symptoms of hysterics threatened to develop, and Miss Harriet's most persuasive powers were taxed to avert an alarming outbreak.

"Hush, dear, hush!" she whispered soothingly, then turned to Richard. "Lord Croftland," she said, "there are circumstances connected with this strange affair which prevent me from explaining fully. Tomorrow, when Imogene and I are less nervous, perhaps we can make you acquainted with the reasons. For the present I beg you to let this man go quietly. We have nothing more to fear from him."

Richard hesitated, glancing from Miss Harriet to the prisoner. "Of course," Miss Renwick, he answered regretfully. "I must bow to your judgment, though in my opinion you would better allow me to turn this fellow over to the police. I imagine they would be inordinately glad to see him. But—just as you like. There is one more little matter, however, which I must insist upon." He turned to the prisoner. "This young lady," he said, "quietly pointing to Miss Imogene, thus paid you a somewhat exorbitant price for her own rightful property. Oblige me by returning the amount."

"Oh, no, no, let him keep it," begged the victim, but Richard was obdurate upon this point.

Mr. Rodrick Fitzgerald, having accomplished the real object of his visit, was glad to be released at any price, especially as the disposal of the letters was merely a device for entering the house and holding the ladies while his confederate rifled the safe. Without more ado he took the money from his pocket, tossed it upon the billiard table and turned to the library door.

"Come moment!" Richard demanded. "Miss Renwick, turn this light upon him, please. Thank you. Now on my I want this gentleman to know me if we chance to meet again."

After a moment's silent scrutiny the Texan spoke in a stern but low voice. "My friend, I am forced to let you go this time, though sadly against my inclination. You owe your release to the kindness of the ladies. The next time the affair will be mine. If you ever molest them again in any way I'll settle with you in a way we make use of in Texas. You understand?"

You are marked, my friend. I'll know your bad eye in Jericho. Yes, and I'll follow you there, too, for the pleasure of watching your worthless neck. Now apologize to these ladies, then stir!"

In Richard's present state there was no suspicion of an English drawl, and Harriet marked it joyously, though his unassuming, for the strain of fear and anxiety was now beginning to tell upon her nerves. Miss Imogene was ready for complete collapse, and the two stood trembling in each other's arms.

The burglar mumbled a stumbling apology, then passed into the library through the door which Richard opened for his exit. He lost no time in stopping through the still open window and in a moment more was skulking across the lawn.

"Lord Croftland," began Miss Harriet, who had followed from the billiard room with Imogene clinging hopelessly to her arm. "Lord Croftland, I want to thank you for—"

The words died suddenly upon her lips, and she turned for support against the wall.

"Who's there?" called a voice in the darkness from the stairs in the hall. "Quick!" whispered Richard to the terror-stricken girls. "It's your father! Go back into the billiard room and slip upstairs when you get the chance. There! It's all right. Leave it to me."

He gave them no chance to disobey, but pushed them through the door, while he spurred his brain for some good excuse to account for his presence in the library at this unusual hour.

"Who's there?" Mr. Renwick called, and this time Richard answered back: "It's I! It's I! Will—er—I mean Croftland, is that you, Mr. Renwick?"

He grabbed a book at random, from one of the shelves, then drew the bull portieres aside, to discover his host, revolver in hand, on the dim lit stairs, which made him look more ghastly and angular than ever.

"Oh, it's you!" said Mr. Renwick in great surprise. "I thought I heard a noise—a shot or something—and got up to investigate. Why in the name of heaven aren't you in bed?"

"I'm actually sorry to have disturbed you," the Texan answered easily. "I stumbled over a beastly chair in the dark. Too bad, upon my word! You see," he explained, "I couldn't sleep, so I came down here to take a liberty and a book."

Mr. Renwick glanced at his costume, which, with the exception of his dress coat, which had been exchanged for a house jacket, was the same his guest had worn earlier in the evening. The burglar thought for a moment, then descended the stairs, entered the library and switched on the electric light. The first thing to catch his eye was an open window, which Richard in his haste had failed to close.

The Texan interpreted the blank astonishment so clearly written on Mr. Renwick's face and proceeded to enlighten him.
